

An international group of researchers discovered an algebraic vulnerability in the recently proposed Friday hash function. It turns out that SNARK/STARK-friendly designs can be vulnerable to Groebner basis attacks for exactly the same reason: few low degree equations. All versions of Jarvis and Friday have much lower security level than expected.

Some slides here .