

Due to the problem on submitting proposals and the ridiculous amount of delegations that are needed for it, I suggest we can create a two-way proposal system, in an attempt to imitate the creation of the roman Senate during the forums.

At first, we can try to have an election.

For ex, we can start delegation or UNI to whoever we wish, at the amounts that we want. The more money you have in this, the more your vote counts, like regular politics. And the 5th of November at 00:00 a snapshot is taken, and the 13 users with the majority of unis delegated became the first senates of UNI. We can then think of forms of them to make proposals and having their separate vote system, all of them can only be senates only one time (that wallet at least), or making them having their own UNI staked for their governance period, maybe more, we can create and modify the rules using the smart contracts.

Then, we need another way of voting, for those who aren't big enough to swim the ocean, so I think that we could use this platform and use this like what it truly is... A forum

, we can have all the discussions in here and create or own voting system. The first things that we should determine is "which users should be allowed to vote?", and then "which users should be allowed to make informal proposals?". Before going deep on this, I must clarify that I believe that everybody should be allowed to make comments.

As an example, I would be ok with the requirement of being a Holder of 400 UNI for +3 months to vote, and to, in addition of that, have being an active member of the community to make a proposal.

*Clarification: All the given names and numbers arent thought, this is more of an invitation to a brainstorm.
