

The public mempool works the same in PoS as in PoW — anyone running an execution client (e.g. geth) can read transactions from the mempool.

It should be noted, however, that the post-merge public mempool may not see as much activity as it does today. With PBS, users and wallets may choose to send all of their transactions to a specific builder (or builders) rather than to the public mempool.