

Hello everyone,

I am a new member to the forums so I was wondering, and I will continue to look myself, what the status or community thoughts and feelings were to attempt to offer or at least field proposals for something like a synthetic ES or CL (SP500 and Crude Oil) futures market respectively. these are pretty large markets that trade almost 24/7 as it is. and I think would be interesting to test their tradeable in this fashion and to see what the volume etc would be.

What are the cons against field such instruments and does DYDX have any current plans to offer such a product. IMO something like a ES or a CL would be much more successful to attempt to synthesize than just a single stock like AAPL or TSLA at present time. but I know little about this.

any thoughts from community members on this subject would be appreciated.