

Is the question here just “how many people have voting control in the CoE wallet?” Because I think we also need more formal roles and responsibilities assigned to new participants, beyond just the people with some voting power over the finances. 7 seems like a reasonable number of “board members” to get consensus on a proposed project to fund, but 7 volunteers is not sufficient to create a full organization. An actual governing organization needs many more contributing members with defined roles.