

Previously, for the Arbitrum deploy, it has been proposed that SUSHI (along with a few others) be whitelisted, and it was approved in a governance vote.

SUSHI has decent volume across centralized and decentralized exchanges great for swaps/partnered aggregators, and the token experiences a generous price range suitable for leverage trading. So our traders would win.

SUSHI is actively developed and has some key rollouts in its roadmaps that align with the L2/sidechain boom. It has generally sound and widely recognized LTV (Long Term Value) prospects, just as competitor to Uniswap. GLP Investors, who are long-biased, would also win.

This might be of interest for Avalanche GLP as well, although you don't often want to fix that which isn't broke.

What do fellow community members think?

Additionally, should Avalanche GLP grandfather the Chainlink-relevant assets that Arbitrum GLP previously whitelisted?
