

Have you thought about splitting up models that clearly changed during the time interval you looked at? I'm not sure we have a simple way of doing that, other than the rather crude "correlation with metamodel".

Its somewhat of a shame that the diagnostics stats are not publically available. They would help enormously in teasing apart when models changed. @richardcraib, maybe the diagnostics could be open?