

Hi AAVE fam, recently (stupidly) I sent AAVE from my Coinbase Pro account to AAVE's contract address. They were shutting down Coinbase Pro and I was scrambling to move tokens out. I intended to send it to my personal external wallet, but somehow whitelisted the AAVE contract address instead. Ridiculous I know.

But here's the thing... reasonably we should be able to get tokens back in these type of situations, which don't involve a human third party. Could we make this a proposal to be voted on? Honest mistakes happen. How can we expect major adoption if we are punished so harshly for a simple mistake where there is no harm no foul, AND the proof is sitting on the blockchain.

I would love our community to lead the way in creating procedure to return tokens that are innocently and mistakenly sent to the contract address. Help please. Thank you
