

I've read many times that people have a problem with how unreadable proposals are on Discourse. Well, there IS a feature that allows you to "hide details," but it's only available once you achieve Trust Level 2 and pass the Advanced User tutorial.

(Click the arrow)

For instance, I'm hiding these details so you can't see them unless you click on the arrow. Isn't that much easier to read? Cool little feature, huh? Kind of interesting how people who are supposed to be so into the DAO asking for hundreds of thousands of dollars somehow miss it. Interesting... who knows... maybe Discourse had something in mind when it put together the features this way... but who am I to speculate? I'm just a monkey

Maybe the DAO should consider limiting proposal drops to users who have gone through this process. After all, achieving a new level and actually taking the time to LEARN the system does actually show a commitment to the DAO.