

Simple question really. For example, Ripple and Stellar are fast and cheap but are generally considered less decentralized as far as I know. This sounds like a perfect fit for plasma, since users can withdraw in case of fraud but still benefit in terms of speed and price of transactions. Does plasma place any restrictions on what types of consensus algorithms can be use (or which ones are cheap to use in terms of root chain transactions needed)?