The transition to TC staking is probably the largest challenge we have right now as a modeling community. I would be interested in getting people sponsored that have ideas how to help people in tackling the TC challenge that with sponsoring from the CoE or with the process of retroactive reimbursements.

In general I am interested in getting people to share more about their models, and I tend to be quite forthcoming when people ask myself (if only because I am running something so cumbersome and tailor-made, it's not easy to copy). And there is a smallish group as well that shares things in the datascience channel. If I can prod more people into sharing, all the better.

And it looks right now like the meetup in London will involve some sharing. Great! Now, how do we get more of that to the whole community?

- In response to a question from hb: Besides chatting, I was under the impression that the workload from CoE is about 1 1/2- 2 hours a week. That is what I have available as well.
- In response to a question from jrb: Would love to be part of the twitter spaces, but the current timeslot doesn't work for me. one-two hours later (depending on summer-time shenanigans) would be perfect. I miss the social part of the weekly office hours with arbitrage!, although the daily thing was too often for me to keep track of.
