

Lately, I was quite surprised at the amount requested for an AIP...

(In no way do I judge or denigrate this project, in this case ApeWater)

What shocks me is not really the amount requested, but the fact that this proposal was treated like any other.

Basically, whether the cost requested for an AIP is $0, $1,000 or $2,000,000, the process is exactly the same.

I can understand it through the different stages of the AIP, from IDEA to LIVE... BUT maybe, should we not establish different criteria for the vote

, including the duration for example depending of the requested cost ?

OR, another idea: create a new category of AIP: AIP Pre-Live

(for example)

Allowing to highlight an AIP before it is Live.

Often, an AIP is submitted several months after collecting community feedback.

At this moment, some discover, others rediscover this proposal...

As the ApeCoin DAO tries to onboard more and more members, there will be more and more cases where newcomers will discover "only" proposal when voting.

In the case of votes involving such a large part of ApeCoin DAO funds, it can be dangerous in my opinion.

I am curious to see your opinions or ideas.

Thank you in advance for taking the time to read me.
