

We did some interesting experiments recently, submitting Uniswap transactions with extremely low gas fees.

The funny thing is that transactions that were supposed to take hours if not days to accept, were accepted in a couple of minutes.

Did any one else see the same behavior and could it be related to front-running by miners?