

Governance is a complicated issue, but is it possible to think that active and involved users (regardless of the volume or amount involved) can be rewarded with governance rights?

In fact the idea is to understand that involvement has to have a value, and that you can't just have voting and proposal powers, involvement also has a role to play

Is it only a power in terms of the number of tokens we have, or can other values combine and come into play?

Also with delegation anyone can ask for power without necessarily being an Aave holder or having been involved in the community for a long time