

The defi world is currently reserved for geeks, developers, and whales. One of the reasons that can make mass adoption difficult is trust. Without a doubt, we can achieve great confidence if we ensure 100% of the capital invested in deposits.

One suggestion could be, for example, to do something similar to what traditional banking offers. Insure 100% up to a specific amount for example 200k USD, and from here on a variable percentage that depends on the funds blocked in the protocol.

There could be different types of stakers, with different percentages depending on the capital they are insuring.

We could also show before each operation what dynamic percentage from this 200k USD is being secured.

It could undoubtedly be a revolution for AAVE as a differentiator and we could surely receive a great investment from traditional finance.