

So nitro is based on geth.

Will future roadmaps include execution client modularity, or is the fraud proof mechanism too deeply entangled with the execution client?

What happens in the remote chance that there's a bug in geth?

Are these black swan failure modes documented somewhere?