

Probably but not necessarily.

Stocks for which you do not submit a prediction are filled in at a median value. This pushes your predictions to the extreme ends, with half going to the high end, and half going to the low. What effect the neutralization has though on the results is undetermined from the user point of view.

If you work through the sample program it helps understand what happens to your submission.