Why would you think a model should 'stay in its lane' so to speak? Especially if that lane depends on performance on the validation sets, which in turn would seem to require those sets to be broadly representative of future eras. Are they?