Hey everyone,

I'm stoked to be part of the Arbitrum DAO through the airdrop! It's amazing to see comments from folks from all over the world, as excited about this DAO as I am.

I truly hope we all stay active and help create a lasting decentralized space. We can learn from other governance experiments happening too. I believe the biggest mistake so far has been the high entry barrier created by complex and attention-demanding governance structures, which prevent people from participating as "layer citizens". Althought it is necessary such complexity for the growing and safety, small but relevant ways for everyone to participate is essencial. Fair, decentralized governance is a complex issue that isn't just for techies or finance pros to tackle. Everyone it's important and no matter their background or the abbility to express themselve in English. We all have a unique expreience and if we all feel a part of the DAO, some positive system may emerge to change things.

What do you think would be a good way to keep people active?

Cheers and good luck to everyone.
