Dharma has announced that they plan to use their delegated voting power to launch a proposal on Fri, Oct 23 that, if successful, would result in a UNI airdrop to their users.

During a live-streamed community chat today, we (including Nadav of Dharma) came to the conclusion that there may be better ways to solve the issues of disenfranchisement raised by Dharma other than a straight-up airdrop.

We also discussed the negative impact of rushing proposals through governance before it's fully matured.

With that knowledge, do you believe that Dharma should still launch their well-publicized airdrop proposal on Fri, Oct 23?

Or do you believe that they should postpone it to allow for further discussion and potential development of alternative solutions by the community?

Should Dharma launch its proposal on Friday, or postpone it?

- Launch it

- Postpone it
