Should treasury-sourced delegation expire? How? Lots of things to consider.

I think a good first effort will be simple. Eg there may lots of cool things we could do with dynamically decaying delegation but that'll require lots of dev work to get done, and have many more inputs to consider when designing the program.

As a starting point, what if we started with two rosters of delegates. Roster A's delegation would expire in 12 months, Roster B's delegation would expire in 18 months. 2 months before those delegations were set to expire, an election could be held for the next Roster (C…N). All subsequent Rosters would have 12 month terms.

In my mind, this precludes granting any delegates tenure and eliminates the conflict of interest inherent in delegates having to vote to revoke their own delegation. What am I missing?
