Nobody knows. The problem with markets is that they change all the time, so your model could be good at the regime the market was in. Also, it depends whether you got nice results in the TC metric, because that's where the big money is. If you want to compete and try new things I would recommend you to stake, it will motivate you to try harder. But if you are not planning to compete there is no point in staking because the markets are changing, the tournament is changing, and the models of other competitors are changing as well.
